Unique Features of Angola's Gender Equality Approach (UNCSW and Beyond)

1. Gender in Post-Conflict Reconstruction

The end of the Angolan civil war in 2002 marked the beginning of building a new country with the central theme of gender equality in the post-conflict reconstruction program.

Towards this, and in adherence with UNSCR 1325, Angola's National Action Plan gives great emphasis to women's involvement in peacebuilding and reconciliation, hence fulfilling the thematic areas of the UNCSW.

2. The Case of Rural Women

Unlike in many countries, Angola places a strong policy emphasis on rural and agrarian women, who actually constitute the core of its informal economy.

This resonates with Angola's statements at CSW56, where it championed the role of rural women in sustainable development.

3. Female-Led Ministries in Male-Dominated Sectors

What is most unique about Angola is the appointment of women to finance, fisheries, and social action ministries, which otherwise indicate a structural intent of inclusion in leadership beyond sectors of health or family.

4. Incorporating Gender Equality in Natural Resource Policy

Being resource rich, Angola integrates gender-responsive budgeting and programmes into sectors such as oil, mining, and agriculture—a strategy that is almost unheard of in Africa.

5. Attention to Second-Chance Education

The country has a rare distinction of offering a second-chance educational program at the national level that targets young-adolescent girls and young women back into formal learning.

Supported by the World Bank and UNICEF, this program is linked with employment generation, reduction in early marriages, and enhancement of ci
