Unique Aspects of Nigeria's Engagement with UNHRC

- EndSARS Movement: The nationwide protests against police brutality, especially those aimed at the Special Anti-Robbery Squad (SARS), brought to light serious concerns about extrajudicial killings and sparked a wave of international attention.

- Boko Haram Insurgency: The ongoing conflict with Boko Haram in the northeast has led to serious human rights abuses, such as widespread abductions and the forced displacement of many people.
 - Religious and Ethnic Tensions: Tensions among various religious and ethnic groups have sparked violence and raised serious human rights issues, especially in the Middle Belt region.
 - Freedom of Expression Challenges: Journalists and activists frequently encounter harassment and detention, which raises serious concerns about press freedom and the right to protest.
 - Gender-Based Violence: Women and girls face a staggering amount of sexual violence, often finding themselves with little access to justice and support services.
 - Child Rights Issues: Child labor, human trafficking, and the struggle for access to education continue to be major issues, particularly in regions affected by conflict.
 - Judicial System Reforms: Reforming the judiciary is all about tackling corruption and making sure trials are fair, but there are still some hurdles to overcome.
 - Civil Society Engagement: Nigeria boasts a lively civil society that plays a crucial role in the UPR process, offering alternative reports and keeping the government in check.
