10 Unique Aspects: Peru & UNHRC

- Environmental Rights in Court: In 2024, the Inter-American Court made a groundbreaking decision by ordering reparations for the residents of La Oroya, establishing a significant connection between environmental issues and human rights.
- Amazon Indigenous Oil Testimony: Indigenous leaders from the Amazon have brought attention to violations of oil rights at the IACHR, and their compelling evidence is ramping up the pressure for accountability at the UNHRC.
- Water Pollution as Human Right: The OHCHR has announced that toxic water dumps have put safe drinking water at risk for 10 million people, which is intensifying the focus on HRC Item 7.
- Protest-Related Rights Regression: The OHCHR reports shed light on the intense crackdown on protests that followed the political changes in 2022, which are now being closely examined in Council discussions.
- Surge in Violence & Crime: Homicides saw a rise in 2024, and extortion became more prevalent, creating serious threats to our democratic order—something that's often highlighted in reports from Human Rights Watch.
- Journalist Harassment Escalates: Defamation cases and press intimidation are clear signs of a troubling trend in democracy—now, press freedom has become a concern for the UN Human Rights Council.

7. NGO Legal Regulation Threat: Peru's recently introduced cooperation law, which has raised concerns from the OHCHR, could limit the activities of NGOs. This is a worrying sign for civic engagement in UN discussions.
 8. Indigenous Rights vs Extractive Industry: The UN and SR reports highlight the ongoing threats to indigenous land rights in the Amazon due to extractive activities, urging the need for free and prior consent.
 9. UPR Review Reveals Inertia: Amnesty and Human Rights Watch are pointing out that the progress on the accepted UPR recommendations is stalling, which is raising some serious concerns about the credibility of the Council.
 10. Environmental Toxicity Input to UN Mechanisms: Peru's toxic cases, highlighted by HRW and OHCHR, reveal a crucial link between health, the environment, and accountability in the Council's thematic work.
